Here's what I did one spring in San Francisco...

I had lunch at Tommy's Joint on Van Ness, then great views along the bay near the Bay Bridge, more sunny views of the city from Twin Peaks, drove past Haight + Ashbury out through Golden Gate Park to the ocean, parked near the old windmill, walked along Ocean Beach up to the Cliff House and watched the sun set.

Other tourist ideas...

In Golden Gate Park during daytime, there's the Japanese Tea Garden (cost to get in) and Strybing Arboretum (cost to get in):

Lombard Street - world's crookedest street
<http://www.htmlhelp.com/~liam/California/SanFrancisco/LombardStreet/>

Views from Coit Tower (walk around tower building to front for view also)

At foot of Market, Hyatt Regency Hotel lobby, or have a drink at revolving restaurant at top, go out back door to Justin Herman Plaza and waterfront

Area at San Francisco side of Golden Gate Bridge, overlooking Fort Point, but be in right lane ready for parking lot else you'll go over bridge, I think easier to park on Cliff House (ocean) side of bridge and walk through tunnel under the bridge approach road

Legion of Honor - Rodin's "The Thinker" in patio, statues of El Cid and Joan of Arc on front lawn, front plaza and fountain are western terminus of the Lincoln Highway (first road across America), views of Golden Gate Bridge driving on ocean side (El Camino Del Mar St + Sea Cliff Ave)
